This Time the World
Film Documentary

Borrowing from Commander Rockwell's autobiographical book title, this very neat production represents a true gem of an insight into life around the Arlington, Va., A.N.P. hq. during the summer of 1965.

It was shot by the same crew simultaneously as they were creating the "Rockwell For Governor" campaign film... part of which we will be recreating later in this series. Whose idea was it originally to have two films back-to-back, one strictly for internal use and another for public consumption? A good idea, no doubt, and something Rockwell himself might have come up with.
